The Nature of Passion In Schnarch's perspective, passion in marriage goes beyond initial infatuation or sexual chemistry. It is rooted in a deep sense of connection that involves emotional intensity, mutual understanding, and personal growth. Passion is sustained when both partners are willing to explore their own vulnerabilities and challenge their emotional boundaries.

The Role of Differentiation

He argues that high levels of differentiation are essential for passionate relationships because they allow individuals to experience intimacy without losing their identity or becoming overly enmeshed.
